

BREASTFEEDING IN THE FIRST FEW WEEKS

Breastfeeding is the natural way to feed your baby. The keys to successful breastfeeding are early, frequent feeding and proper positioning of the baby at the breast.

A baby that is breastfeeding well:

- is feeding well at least 8 times in 24 hours (generally every 2-3 hours), more frequent feeds are normal and good
- makes quiet “caw” sounds when swallowing
- has pale, light-coloured urine with almost no smell

NOTE: It is easier to notice urine in cloth diapers. A facial tissue can be placed inside disposable diapers, if you are not sure.

- at 1 day old, has at least 1 wet diaper and at least 1-2 sticky dark green/black stools
- at 2 days old, has at least 2 wet diapers and at least 1-2 sticky dark green/black stools
- at 3 days old, has at least 3 heavy wet diapers and at least 3 brown/green/yellow stools, occasional “red brick” coloured staining is normal until day 3
- at 4 days old, has at least 4 heavy wet diapers and at least 3 brown/green/yellow stools
- at 5 days and older, as the milk supply increases, baby has at least 6 heavy wet diapers and at least 3 large soft yellow seedy stools
- is alert and gaining weight and back to birth weight by two weeks of age

You should seek help if:

- your baby does not have a sufficient number of wet diapers and/or stools every day
- your baby is very sleepy and hard to wake for feedings
- your nipples are sore and do not start to get better
- you have fever, chills, flu-like symptoms, or a red painful area on your breast
